

COVID-19

update 23 March

We continue to work to look after the health of your horses.

We are changing how we work to limit social contact and contribute to keeping humans as well as horses healthy. If you need us, please phone us as normal. You may get an engaged tone, please be a little patient and just ring back.

All our administrative teams will be working remotely and our vets are having the bare minimum of physical contact with the practice. We're getting very good at virtual team meetings and discussions to ensure good communication remains in place.

We aren't cancelling calls as we believe that we are best to treat problems promptly rather than allowing them to get worse where more complex treatment involving more people may be necessary. We can then discuss each situation accurately and make good decisions. We also want to keep horses healthy and are currently continuing to vaccinate.

When booking in a call you will be asked questions around your own health and social distancing – please don't be offended. We want to be responsible for our behaviour and get the right balance between human health, not just as individuals but as a society, and horse health and welfare.
